Workout Notes

- This workout should ideally be done on a flat route, but some incline is ok (just it will be harder!)
- Your fast-paced running should feel like approximately 80% of your maximum sprinting speed.
- You should be out of breath by the end of each segment of fast-paced running. If you are not breathing hard, then you are not pushing hard enough!
- The period of walking is your recovery time, which allows your heart rate to lower so that you can push hard again on the next fast-paced segment. Don't be tempted to go faster than walking during this recovery period.
- Be tough! It's important to keep pushing hard during the second half of the workout, during the fast-pace running segments.
